

Majella brings faithful, private cycle charting to iPhone and Android

The Catholic natural family planning app is now on both platforms, with charts that never leave a woman's own device

MELBOURNE, Australia. Trinitas Homes has released Majella for Android, bringing its Catholic natural family planning app to Google Play alongside the existing iPhone app. Majella is now available on both the App Store and Google Play. It offers serious sympto-thermal cycle charting built on a simple conviction: a woman's fertility is part of how she was made, and the software she trusts with it should honour both her faith and her privacy.

Majella was built by Catholic families who were tired of cycle apps that pushed contraception, sold user data or reduced a woman's cycle to a glib verdict. The app charts basal body temperature, wrist temperatures from compatible wearables, cervical mucus observations and LH test results together, the way the sympto-thermal method teaches. It explains its reasoning on the chart rather than issuing a bare fertile or infertile call, and it encourages users to learn the method properly: charts export as a clean PDF to share with an accredited instructor, and a directory of certified fertility awareness educators is built in.

Privacy is structural, not a setting. Majella has no accounts, no ads, no trackers and no analytics. Cycle data stays on the woman's own device unless she chooses a backup to her personal iCloud or Google Drive. Nothing is sold, because nothing is collected.

The app is named for St Gerard Majella, the Redemptorist brother venerated as the patron of expectant mothers.

Majella is free to download, with everyday charting free. An optional Majella Pro subscription unlocks the full experience, including exporting and sharing a chart as a PDF with an accredited instructor, deeper insights and trends across cycles, wrist-temperature charting, and encrypted backup to a personal iCloud or Google Drive.

"We built Majella because Catholic couples deserve software that takes the Faith as seriously as it takes the science. Natural family planning is a practice of attention and love. The tools for it should be beautiful, honest and completely private."

— the founders of Trinitas Homes

ABOUT TRINITAS HOMES

Trinitas Homes Pty Ltd is a family software company in Melbourne, Australia, run by a husband and wife who build tools to help families live their faith with confidence. Majella is its first app.

MEDIA CONTACT

admin@trinitashomes.com.au · majellafertility.com · press kit: majellafertility.com/press